RESEARCH PROJECTS

Name of the research project	A dynamic analysis of supply-chain networks and their disruption
Research project Supervisor	Prof. Marco Scarsini (MAT/06)
Summary description of the research project	Supply chains are the intricate networks of organizations, people, activities, information, and resources involved in the production and distribution of goods and services. These networks span the globe and can be complex, involving multiple stages, suppliers, manufacturers, distributors, retailers, and logistics providers. A well-functioning supply chain is critical for the efficient movement of products from their point of origin to the end consumer, ensuring that goods are available when and where they are needed. However, supply chains are vulnerable to disruptions, which can be caused by a wide range of factors, including natural disasters, man-made disasters, pandemics, supply chain complexity, logistical issues, economic fluctuations, cybersecurity threats, etc. Supply chain disruptions can have profound consequences, including reduced product availability, increased costs, and reputational damage. Organizations are increasingly aware of the need to build more resilient supply chains by diversifying suppliers, investing in technology, and adopting strategies like just-in-time inventory management. In the face of disruption, supply chain management is a critical function. Effective supply chain managers must be agile, prepared to adapt to changing circumstances, and equipped with tools and strategies to mitigate risks and recover quickly when disruptions occur. Innovations in technology, such as blockchain, IoT, and artificial intelligence, are also being leveraged to enhance supply chain visibility and resilience. A supply chain is modeled as a network whose vertices are firms and whose edges represent their interactions. The network evolves dynamically, and may be affected by sudden disruptions. Many of the existing supply-chain models are static and, when dealing with disruptions, compare pre- and post-shock equilibria. In real life, the effects of disruption take time to spread across the network. Understanding this temporal element is fundamental for taking mitigating actions. The main goal of this project is to study dynamic models of supply-chain disruption. The formal analysis of this phenomenon will use tools from network theory, probability theory, game theory, optimization, dynamical systems, machine learning. We are looking for a candidate who has a strong expertise in at least one of the above fields.
